Serving as the Vice President for the West African region, Munda is a dedicated family man who is happily married with children. He has a world class education that fits perfectly with his efforts to better the infrastructure of his home country. His dedication extends just as earnestly into his professional career as well as his forays within the political arena.

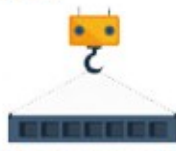

Munda has:

Over thirty years of professional experience as an engineer. Commencing with his graduation with his civil engineering degree with honors from the University of Sierra Leone. He then followed up with a graduate degree from the University of Birmingham in the United Kingdom.

He holds numerous professional certifications and training in infrastructure development with accreditation spanning the globe from countries such as the United States, United Kingdom, Burkina Faso, India, Germany and Saudi Arabi to name but a few.

As a recognized specialist in procurement and infrastructure management, he has managed several development projects in his roles spanning Chief Engineer to his last as Director General. He has lead projects where he worked directly with the European Union, United Nations, World Bank, African Development Bank and even the Kuwait Fund. In these and other projects, he has been directly responsible for the development of thousands of kilometers of infrastructure development, roadways and managed budgets in the hundreds of millions of Euros and USD.
